Biography

Artur Godes Caballeria was born on April 6, 1868, in Fonollar, Barcelona to parents Pasqual Godes Gomis and Rosa Godes Caballeria (born Madiroles) ^{[1][2]}. His father Pasqual was born on April 5, 1824 ^{[1][2]}, while his mother Rosa was born on October 13, 1834 ^{[1][2]}. Artur was baptized on April 11, 1868, at the Cathedral of Barcelona ^[1]. He had eight siblings: Dolors, Ana, Avelina, Vicente, Ramona, Pau, Mercè, and Josep ^[1].

Artur married Emilia Hurtado Giró, who was born on April 29, 1872 ^{[1][2]}. They were wed around June 23, 1894, at the Basilica of Santa Maria del Mar in Barcelona ^[1]. Together they had seven children: Emili, Ernest, Rosa, Mercedes, Josep Maria, Ramón, and Artur ^{[1][2]}.

Throughout his life, Artur lived in various locations within Barcelona. From his birth until 1870, he resided at Fonollar, 30 4o ^[1]. Then from 1870 to 1874, he moved to Fonollar, 3 4o, followed by a stay at Jaume Giralt, 3 1o from 1874 to 1885 ^[1]. Subsequently, he lived at Baja de San Pedro, 40 4o, from 1885 to 1891; Banys Vells, 15 4o 2a, from 1891 to 1896; Mediana de San Pedro, 12 6o, from 1896 to 1899; Ripoll, 12 2o 2a, from 1899 to February 15, 1908; Mayor, 69 bajos, from February 15, 1908, to 1910; Plaça Figuerola, 4, bajos, from 1910 to 1919; and finally Bertrán, 67, from 1919 until his death ^[1].

Professionally, Artur was a tenor at the Liceo and served as a maestro de capilla at both Santa Maria del Mar and La Bonanova ^[1].

Artur Godes Caballeria passed away due to encephalomalacia, a cerebral hemorrhage, on March 9, 1925, at the age of 56, in his residence at Bertran, 67, Barcelona ^[1].

Historical Context

Artur Godes Caballeria entered the world on April 6, 1868, in Fonollar, Barcelona, during a period marked by industrial expansion and political unrest in Spain. Born to Pasqual Godes Gomis and Rosa Madiroles, he was baptized five days later at the Cathedral of Barcelona. His birth coincided with the tumultuous years following the Glorious Revolution of 1868, which resulted in the brief ousting of Queen Isabella II.

In an era when family units were large and central to social life, Artur married Emília Hurtado Giró and fathered seven children. Their marriage took place around June 23, 1894, at the Basilica of Santa Maria del Mar, set against the backdrop of the vibrant Modernisme movement that was sweeping through Catalonia, influencing its architecture, art, and culture.

Throughout his lifetime, Artur's residences shifted across various districts in Barcelona, reflecting the city's urban development as it underwent significant changes due to the Industrial Revolution. The expansion of the Eixample district and the 1888 Barcelona Universal Exposition are examples of events that transformed the cityscape during Artur's transitions between homes.

Artur's professional life as a tenor at the Liceo and maestro de capilla intersected with a golden age for opera and choral music in Barcelona. The Gran Teatre del Liceu, where he performed, had become one of Europe's leading opera houses, surviving the turbulent times including the Spanish-American War (1898) and the Tragic Week of 1909.

Artur Godes Caballeria passed away from encephalomalacia on March 9, 1925, at the age of 56. His death came just after the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera began in 1923, a time of political repression but also infrastructural modernization, which included efforts to quell the cultural movements that Artur himself may have been part of during his musical career.

Last Name Origins

The surname 'Godes' is likely of Catalan origin, where '-es' endings are common in patronymic surnames, indicating 'son of.' The root 'God-' could be a variation or short form of a personal name such as 'Godefredo,' which is of Germanic origin and means 'peace of God.' The second part of the surname, 'Caballeria,' suggests a connection to knighthood or cavalry, derived from the Latin 'caballarius,' meaning 'horseman' or 'knight.' This component of the surname may indicate an ancestral link to someone who was a member of the cavalry or had some association with knights. However, without specific genealogical information, this interpretation remains speculative.

While 'Godes' has been previously discussed as potentially being of Catalan origin with a possible connection to a personal name like 'Godefredo,' the latter part of the surname 'Gomis' also requires exploration. 'Gomis' is another surname that can be found in Catalonia and might derive from the given name 'Gomes,' which itself comes from the Gothic word 'guma,' meaning 'man.' Alternatively, it could originate from a place name or geographical location bearing a similar name. As with many surnames, the exact lineage and story behind 'Godes Gomis' would require individual historical and genealogical research to fully uncover its origins and meanings within a particular family context.

Consistency Issues

1. The number of siblings listed differs between sources. Source ^[1] lists eight siblings, whereas source ^[2] mentions only five.
2. The name 'Romana' appears as a sibling in source ^[2], but not in source ^[1]. Conversely, 'Ana', 'Avelina', 'Vicente', and 'Ramona' are mentioned in source ^[1] but not in source ^[2].
3. There is an inconsistency with the birth year of sibling Pau. Source ^[1] states 1872, while source ^[2] suggests 1873.
4. Mercè's birth date is inconsistent, with source ^[1] stating August 27, 1874, and source ^[2] suggesting August 23, 1875.
