Biography

Rosa Pujol Pont, born Godes Hurtado, was born on July 6, 1899^[1], in Ripoll, 12 2o 2a Barcelona, Spain^[1]. She was the daughter of Artur Godes Caballeria and Emilia Godes Caballeria (born Hurtado Giró)^{[1][2]}. Her father, Artur, was born on April 6, 1868, in Fonollar, 30 4o Barcelona^[1], while her mother, Emilia, was born on April 29, 1872, in Cuch, 5 4o^[1]. Rosa had six siblings: Emili, Ernest, Mercedes (also known as Mercé), Josep Maria, Ramón, and Artur^{[1][2]}.

Rosa married Joan Pujol Pont, who was born on March 6, 1899 ^[1], in Muntaner, 78 Barcelona ^[1]. They were wed in October 1924 at Iglesia Concepció in Barcelona ^[1]. The couple had a son named Joan, born on September 6, 1925 ^{[1][2]}.

Throughout her life, Rosa lived in various locations within Barcelona. From her birth until 1908, she resided at Ripoll, 12 2o 2a ^[1]. Between 1908 to 1910, she moved to Mayor, 69, bajos ^[1], followed by Plaça Figuerola, 4, bajos from 1910 to 1919 ^[1]. Subsequently, she lived at Bertrán, 67 from 1919 to 1925 ^[1], then at Bertrán, 82 from 1930 to 1937 ^[1]. A brief stay at Bertrán, 63 occurred from November 9 to December 9, 1937 ^[1]. Afterward, she relocated to Alfons XII, Parets del Vallès from December 10, 1937, until 1939 ^[1], before returning to Bertrán, 63 where she stayed until 1951 ^[1]. Finally, she settled at Homer, 27 bis from 1951 until her death in 1986 ^[1].

Rosa passed away due to natural causes related to old age on January 26, 1986, at the age of 86, in her residence at Homer, 27 bis Barcelona ^{[1][2]}. She was interred at Cementiri de les Corts ^[1].

Historical Context

Rosa Pujol Pont, née Godes Hurtado, entered a world on the cusp of great change when she was born in Barcelona, Spain, on July 6, 1899. Her birth coincided with the tail end of Spain's loss of its last major overseas colonies following the Spanish-American War of 1898, which marked the decline of Spain as a global imperial power. Rosa's family life began in an urbanizing Barcelona during the early 20th century, a period characterized by industrial growth and social unrest.

In October 1924, Rosa married Joan Pujol Pont amidst a period of political instability in Spain. The dictatorship of Primo de Rivera had begun just a month prior, initiating an era that would suppress regional identities and catalan culture. Their marriage took place against this backdrop of cultural repression and centralization efforts by the Spanish government.

The couple experienced significant historical events throughout their lives together, including the establishment of the Second Spanish Republic in 1931, which brought hopes for modernization and democratic reforms. However, these aspirations were short-lived as the Spanish Civil War erupted in 1936. Rosa's movements between residences in Barcelona during the late 1930s suggest the impact of the conflict, as many citizens faced displacement due to the fighting and political persecution.

After the war ended in 1939, Rosa returned to Barcelona, now under the authoritarian rule of Francisco Franco. This period saw strict censorship, political repression, and economic hardship across Spain. Despite these challenges, Rosa continued her life in Barcelona, witnessing the slow recovery of the city and country through the mid-20th century until Franco's death in 1975 and the subsequent transition to democracy.

Rosa lived her final years during a time of transformation as Spain moved towards democracy after Franco's regime. She passed away at the age of 86 on January 26, 1986, having witnessed nearly a century of profound changes, from the fall of an empire to the rise of a new democratic Spain. Her interment at Cementiri de les Corts placed her among many other Barcelonians who had navigated the complexities of the 20th century.

Last Name Origins

The surname 'Godes' could be a variant of 'Godoy', which is believed to have originated in Spain. It may derive from the Germanic personal name 'Godo', meaning 'good' or 'god-like'. The addition of '-es' signifies 'son of Godo'. As for 'Hurtado', it is also of Spanish origin and means 'stolen' or 'hidden'. It was possibly used as a nickname for someone who was cunning or stealthy, or perhaps for an abandoned child. When combined as 'Godes Hurtado', the name likely indicates a family lineage that includes both these surnames, suggesting a heritage connected to the regions where these names were common.

The surname 'Pujol' is Catalan in origin, referring to a small hill or mound; it comes from the Latin word 'podium', meaning 'elevated place'. This topographic surname would have been given to individuals living near a notable hillock or rise in the landscape. 'Pont', on the other hand, means 'bridge' in Catalan and French, derived from the Latin 'pons, pontis'. It is likely a habitation name for someone who lived near a significant bridge. In the compound surname 'Pujol Pont', the combination suggests a linkage between families identified by these two distinct geographical features, indicating ancestors who were associated with both a hill and a bridge.

Consistency Issues

1. The date of birth for Rosa is inconsistent; one source states July 6, 1899 ^[1], while another claims July 3, 1899 ^[2].
2. There is a discrepancy in the birth month of her husband, Joan Pujol Pont; one record shows March ^[1] and another August ^[2].
3. Her sister's name appears as Mercedes in one account ^[1] and Mercé in another ^[2].
